SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 3.—Never was gupboat so royally christened as the graceful white "Wheeling," which rides at anchor at Mare Island, in the calm, blue bay of San Francisco, Officers of the navy looked on while good things and beautiful were poured into the lap of this fortunate naval infant and were heard to remark that when next the naval secretary had occasion to build a boat, they hoped he'd name it for some city in West Virginia, time had aboard a vessel in Uncle Sam's uavy.

When it was all over, the officers of the gunboat were thoroughly convinced that a truer and more patriotic sentiment than that which prompted the people of Wheeling to visit them never existed, and the people of Wheeling, on the other hand, went away strong in the belief that the officers of the trim little war ship are the most galant and courteous of any that sail the briny, and rully deserve to officer a ship so important, in their judgment, and so well godfathered as the Wheeling.

It was a Big Day. It was a Big Day.

It was a big day in the itinerary of

It was a big day in the illnerary of the eastern visitors. They all arose early, and by $ o'clock were all aboard the tug Ssa Queen at Mission pier for their memorable trip up the bay to the Mare Island navy yard. This expedition on the bay, like all the other outlings that have been arranged for the delectation of the visitors, was under the management of the California convention committee, and that committee left nothing undone that would add to the pleasure and enjoyment of its guests. nothing undone that would not the pleasure and enjoyment of its guests. The tug Sea Queen was kindly furnish-ed for the occasion by the Union Iron Works, and was generously stored with plenty of those good things that are relished by a palate tickled by the salt

To make a whole day of it, the visitors were taken on a trip to the Union Iron Works, before the start for the navy yard. Under the guidance of Irving M. Scott, president of the Union Iron Works, they were shown all over the ship yards, were afforded a view of the war vessels in course of construction there, and were then taken aboard the battle-ship Oregon, where they were officers. At 10:20 o'clock the strat: was made for Mare Island, with a luncheon on the way that streamed the wake of the tug with empty bottles, eggshells and apple-cores.

It was 1 o'clock when Mare Island hove in sight, and a delegation of officers from the Wheeling, consisting of Ensign Durell, Passed Assistant Engineer Arnold and Assistant Paymaster Irwin, was on hand to welcome the vis-Irwin, was on hand to welcome the vis Irwin, was on hand to welcome the visitors. They were escorted aboard the gunboat, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion with the ship's colores. The gay colored bunting was arranged in picturesque manner about the deck, which was entirely enclosed with canvas. The scene aboard ship was one that all declare they will always remember with pleasure.

The presentation of the silver service The presentation of the silver service followed shortly after the arrival of Admiral W. A. Kirkland, with the crew of the Wheeling lined up on either side of the main deck. Congressman Dovener, who heads the Wheeling delegation, made the presentation speech, which was brief, but full of sentiment.

The Eloquent Dovener.

"Somewhat over a year ago," he said, addressing his words to Captain Sebree. of the Wheeling, "it came to our attention that two twin gunboats were to be built at the Union Iron Works. Myself and others from the town of Wheeling visited the navy department in Wash ington and secured the promise of the secretary of the navy that, when the vessels were christened, one of them would be called the Wheeling, All this vessels were christened, one of them would be called the Wheeling. All this has been done, and our citizens, inspired with a new patriotism through this event, determined to do something to show their appreciation of the honor conferred upon their city. Belleving that nothing could be more welcome and useful than a silver, china and glasswire service made by our own skilled workmen, we have brought to you such a present. As to its quality and fitness we leave you to judge. We have crossed rivers, plains, valleys and mountains to bring this, our offering to you. And now our mission is accomplished. We leave it with you, canfident that wherever, in the course of future years, you may be called, the vessel in your charge will always acquit itself with honor.

Captain Sebree, in response, said: "It is in consequence of our good for-tune in being the first assigned to duty to this ship, that we have the pleasure of having you on board to-day. And it falls to my lot to thank you in behalf of the secretary of the navy and my broth-er officers here for the beautiful gift you have brought to our years and for er officers here for the beautiful gift you have brought to our vessel and for the cordial and kindly sentiments with which you have accompanied the gifts. "The citizens of many of our states and cities have generously shown their cordial feeling for the naval service by giving presents to the ships which have been hopored by bearing the names of their states and cities, but in no case, I believe, has a delegation of citizens come so far on such a generous errand. come so far on such a generous errand nor with gifts so varied, artistic and useful, and wholly the handlwork of their fellow-citizens.

But, I take it, it is not kindly feeling son, I take I, it is not kindly feeling alone that has inspired you to make this long journey, or that prompted your fellow-citizens to make and send us this evidence of their artistic skill and craftsmanship.

From the War Born State.

"This ship is but one of many in the public service. To her making went the public service. To her making went the materials and labor from many stakenthe ores from Michigan, the steef from Pennsylvania or West Virginia, the lumber from Oregon or Washington and the skill and labor of the ctizens of California; so that she stands to-day in some sort an epitome of our whole country. And, I take it, your presence here to-day is more than anything else a demonstration of the pride and devotion that you have—that we all have—in our common country. Your presence here to-day is an evidence of the pride with which we bear our common citizenship, and the loyalty and devotion which we bear for our common country. which we bear for our common country.

And it is singularly appropriate that

And it is angularly appropriate that such a maritiment should come from the war-born state of West Virginia.

"It is probable that the keel of this vessel will cover be washed by the waters of the Ohio river, but in whitever sears the may sail or whatever countries he may visit, remember she is under that flag at all times and except where a part of the United States—a part of every state in the Union.

"The Wheeling and Marletta were built from the same plans, and are as mear as reasible alike in all particulars except their boffers. But experience has proven that it is impossible to built itwo boats, houses, ships or anything else exactly alike. One will always be better than the other. Now, whatever my friend and classmate, Captain Symonds, and his officers and men of the Marletta may think, we know that the Wheeling is the better vessel of the Wheeling is the better vessel of Wheeling is the better vessel of the two."

When the appliance and laughter had subsided somewhat H. C. Richards, sheriff of Ohio county, W. Va., controlled the attention of the gathering long enough to present Congressiman Dovener with a beautiful diamond embellished locket. Then the band played and the ensuing three hours were given over to music, dancing, refreshments and general sociability. The lunchen served aboard the yessel was an elaborate affair and won many praises from the victors. The handsome sliver punch bowl was christened with a rare mixture, to which everybody did full fustice, and while the victors remained aboard all reveled in the conviviality and general good feeling that the occasion, aided by the hospitality and courlesy of the Wheeling's gallant officers, inspired.

The departure was made at 4 o'clock

The departure was made at 4 o'clock and it is safe to say that no visitors ever received a more hearty godspeed. There were cheers for the Wheeling, the officers of the Wheeling, and more cheers for the town of Wheeling. Then the navy was cheered, and some did not fall to remember that the ladies had to be cheered.

Down the lay.

Down the Bay.

As the tug stood down the bay, headed for San Francisco, every one aboard was either waving a handkerchief or a was either waving a handkerchief or a hat, and at the same time indulging in a vociferous yell. Every war vessel at the navy yard and every launch and engine that was equipped with a steam whistle joined in the car-splitting chorus, and, amid the general din and uproar and the waving of lags and hand-kerchiefs, the people from Wheeling bid a sad adleu to their newfound friends of the navy. The Wheelinglies were so overflowing with good nature and enthusiasm that they did not mind the drenching rain they encountered on the return trip, and all arrived in the city at dusk thoroughly convinced that they had never so thoroughly enjoyed an had never so thoroughly enjoyed an had never so thoroughly enjoyed an outing in all their experiences.

The presentation was the climax of enjoyment for the people of Wheeling, but it was neither all nor the end of the pleasure. It is not unmerited for a Californian to say that there is no hostess like California. It is the simple truth. If you don't believe it, ask the Knights Templar, ask the Christian Endeavorers, ask the letter carriers presently and the Grand Army veterans and everyone else that has ever visited California, officially.

Unbounded Hospitality.

From the time the strangers crossed

From the time the strangers crossed the state line, they have not been alone a moment. Flowers have been showera moment. Flowers have been showered on them, friendly hands have clasped them, in fact have pulled them hither and thither, until they did not know to which place to go or which invitation to accept. If they had a month, instead of a week, they would easily put it in. So crowded is their itnerary that they have to use a fine sense of discrimination to avoid being killed by fatigue.

Listent to the bill of fare for the first day they went to the state board of trade when they gazed at mammoth vegetables and saw fruit that made the story of Jonah and the whale pale into insignificance.

Then they went to see the silver and cut glass and china prepared for the Wheeling and which has been on exhibition for some days in the window of Nathan, Dahamana & Company. It is a beautiful thing, with an immense silver punch bowl, inscribed; "Presented to the United States Guaboat Wheeling by the City of Wheeling, W. No wonder the officers of the Wheeling look forward to its being "put in commission," if such a pautical term may be used with reference to anything short of a plin.

Mayor Phelan, one of the youngest of San Francisco's mayors, had set aside the afternoon for the reception of the visitors, and at 1.30 o'clock F. W. Dohrmann, the president of the Merchants' Association, led the way to the city hall. The building in which the city executive holds forth is a recently completed structure which reflects the greatest short of a ship. tive holds forth is a recently completed structure which reflects the greatest credit to those responsible for its ex-istence. The work on it was begun twenty-five years ago, and, after many vicissitudes due to changes in the local administration of affairs, its finishing touches are just now being added. In the course of its exection over 6,000 tons of brickwork, 1,200 tons of terra cotta work, and $50 tons of metal work have been contributed to make it one of the een contributed to make it one of the most perfectly equipped and well finish-ed municipal buildings in the United States. Its cost is a little less than six million dollars.

Phelan's All Right.

Mayor Phelan greeted each of the visitors with a cordial handshake and in expression of the pleasure it afford an expression of the pleasure it allowed him to meet so many distinguished guests of the state, for he regarded them all in that light. He assured them that there was nothing in the city over which he had the honor to preside which they should fail to treat as their own absolute measure. There was own absolute property. There was, said the mayor, every reason why the visitors should regard their welcome to California as a personal one. They were all worthy people in their commuities, at home, and such visitors were tways doubly welcome to this part of ne west. Then again, said Mayor Phedways doubly welcome to this part of the west. Then again, said Mayor Phe an, they represented, to a large exten he chies and attros from which the iad made a long journey to fulfill the lictaics of patriotism to the fation in excessor pade in its defences as typics a proper pride in its defences as typified by the gunboat, which, he was sure, would never bring discredit on its sponsor. Continuing the mayor said that he was not an entire stranger to the hospitality of West Virginia, nor indeed to that of the other states which President Denicke, of the Mechanics Institute them good-naturedly informed Mayor Phelan that in behalf of the increasts which he had a share in representing he claimed the homer of the visitors' time for the next two hours, and the mayor gracefully yielded the point and bade the easterners good-day. From the city hall Mr. Denicke escorted the party to the Mechanics' Pavilion, where the annual fair and exhibit of the institute is being held. A special programme of music had been prepared, and until nearly 5 o'clock the visitors were regaled with the music of the augmented orchestra, while they wandered through the aisless of the enormous structure, or lounged here and there in groups enjoying the most successful display of local products and manufactured goods ever held under the auspices of the institute.

Pioncer Hall and the Academy of Sciences were the next attractions, and although but little time was allotted to them the visitors were repaid for their effort. It seems scarcely appropriate to use the word "effort" on an occasion of this sort, yet it expresses the fatigued condition of many of the party who had not recovered from the overland trip and who were anxious to take in ever thing worth seeing.

And the Sheriff Kicked.

And the Sheriff Etcked. At eight o'clock this evening the lob by of the eminestly staid and respectable Occidental hotel resembled an ante-room of the house of representatives at Washington. Seven Congress men were to be seen at one time enjoying their after dinner cigars, while the ing their after dinner clears, while the ladies of the party were preparing for the inevitable trip to Chinatown. An hour later the start was made. Sheriff Richards, of Wheeling, declared that he did not approve of the launt, but consented to go along merely to protect his companions from any possible dantal onsented to go more any possible dan-nis companions from any possible dan-nis companions from any possible danhis companions from any possible danger. Capitain Davison, who had evidently studied up on the question, assured him that the trip was an eventless one, and that anybody was as affecting the heart of Chinatown as in his own dwellins. But the sheriff was obdurate. Like the man who goes to the circus, "just to take the children," the genial officer of the law insisted on assuming the role of a guardian angel.

The trip was iremendously interesting, it was half past twelve before they returned, and it is doubtful if in all their travels, the party from West Virginia will see anything more interesting than this weird city within a city—this oriental core of this occidental metropolis.
